

Grounds Development Day – 29 May 2009

A day giving volunteers the opportunity to gain or develop environmental skills and knowledge. To encourage community involvement in grounds work in the breathing place for existing volunteers in addition to providing an opportunity to recruit new volunteers and to continue to improve the area for biodiversity and extend wildlife habitats.

Nine volunteers and seven Centre staff enjoyed a day working in the breathing place. As well developing features such as the sensory and butterfly gardens, general maintenance, such as ground clearance was also carried out and areas restored and enhanced for wildlife.

Maintenance and renewed planting of the butterfly and sensory gardens attracted both visitors and wildlife throughout the year.
